Padma Resort Bali's Japanese Chef
The Gifted Architect Who Loves Cooking

Legian, Bali - Born in Tokyo, Japanese Chef of Padma Resort Bali, Shoichi Shiraiwa is a fan of sport, healthy lifestyle and happiness not obtained merely from tangible things. True happiness comes from the heart and warm relations made between people. He couldn't stand eating without any vegetable in his meal. The reason is clearly because he's of a Japanese descendant and is very fond of vegetable in addition to seafood and meat. He basically loves all types of food, especially Japanese food. He grew up with in Japan and has spent many years around the Unites States, like working for New York's Sushi Taro and several other Japanese Restaurant around Florida.

Architecture savvy is what he might also be best described as, for he has an extensive experience around Japan and US in building and construction projects, other skill he is proficient in. This skill determines his attention for details thus he is no doubt the person to rely on when it comes to assuring the quality of Japanese dishes in Padma Resort Bali. When asked what sort of food he would recommend to others, he answered that everybody has different taste and style, thus what one considers delicious may not taste the same to others,

Shoichi Shiraiwa, Padma Resort Bali's Japanese Chef, is ready to provide the best Japanese food for all the guests. Happiness is indeed coming from the intangible things, like the satisfaction of a good Japanese food freshly prepared with only the best ingredients by the best people to give such a memorable resort experience at value for money.

Padma Resort Bali is a five star resort in Legian managed by Padma Hotels and Resorts Management. It is romantically set amidst 6.5 hectares of tropical landscaped gardens on Legian's legendary sunset beach and only 15 minutes away from the Ngurah Rai International Airport.
